A guide to verification

Verification is a routine process colleges use to ensure the information reported on your financial aid applications, such as the FAFSA, is accurate. It doesn’t mean you did anything wrong! The process involves submitting forms and documents to the financial aid office.

What to do now

- Wait for the college to send you instructions for completing verification
- Keep an eye on your email, college portal, and mail - most colleges will send verification requests this way
- Some private schools that require the CSS Profile may also require a type of institutional verification called IDOC.

Documents for verification

You may need to submit some or all of these documents to complete verification:

Verification worksheet (dependent or independent)
- Each college will have their own verification worksheet

Tax transcript (for tax-filers)
- See our handout for directions on how to request your tax transcript

Verification of Non-Filing letter
- If you or your parent(s) did not file taxes, the college may require you submit a verification of non-filing letter (VNF)
- You can request a VNF by completing and sending the 4506-T form (recommended) or online at the IRS website
- Watch our video on completing the 4506-T form

U.S. Passport
- For proof of citizenship. If you don’t have a passport, you can provide a copy of U.S. naturalization documents, U.S. birth certificate, or Citizenship affidavit form

Valid Permanent Resident card
- For proof of immigration status
